When she was a little girl, Jane Goodall loved watching animals. She crouched in a hen house quietly for hours, hoping to see how a chicken lays eggs. She brought earthworms into her bed to see how they move. When she read The Story of Dr. Dolittle—about an imaginary doctor who goes to Africa and learns to talk with the animals! She decided, “That’s what I want to do.”

When she grew up, Jane Goodall went to Africa. She was especially interested in the apes and chimpanzees. Since their bodies are so much like human bodies, she thought that we could learn a lot from the chimpanzees.

Goodall went to the African country of Tanzania. She lived in a part of the country where hunters were not allowed and where a group of a hundred chimpanzees lived. She learned a lot about chimpanzees that people didn’t know before: how they communicated with each other and how they invented tools for life. Now she spends all her time working for animal rights.

31. Jane Goodall is a _____ (A. carpenter B. biologist C. tailor D. politician).
32. In order to learn about the apes’ communication, Jane Goodall had to observe their _____ (A. facial expression B. brain cells C. digestion system D. pregnancy)
33. A chimpanzee looks more like a _____ (A. lion B. zebra C. gorilla D. snake).
34. In order to learn about the apes’ tools, Jane Goodall had to observe how they _____ (A. hunted for food B. clapped hands C. danced D. sang).
35. Her work is a lifelong devotion. Now Jane Goodall is an animal rights _____ (A. salesperson B. activist C. druggist D. pharmacist)

“The Wise King”

from The Madman: His Parables and Poems

by Gibran, Kahlil, 1883-1931

Once there ruled in the distant city of Wirani a king who was both mighty and wise. And he was feared for his might and loved for his wisdom. Now, in the heart of that city was a well, whose water was cool and crystalline, from which all the inhabitants drank, even the king and his courtiers; for there was no other well. One night when all were asleep, a witch entered the city, and poured seven drops of strange liquid into the well, and said, “From this hour he who drinks this water shall become mad.” Next morning all the inhabitants, save the king and his lord chamberlain, drank from the well and became mad, even as the witch had foretold. And during that day the people in the narrow streets and in the market places did naught but whisper to one another, “The king is mad. Our king and his lord chamberlain have lost their reason. Surely we cannot be ruled by a mad king. We must dethrone him.” That evening the king ordered a golden goblet to be filled from the well. And when it was brought to him he drank deeply, and gave it to his lord chamberlain to drink. And there was great rejoicing in that distant city of Wirani, because its king and its lord chamberlain had regained their reason.

36. This is a true story. (A. True B. False)
37. The king was mad in reality. (A. True B. False)
38. The king ordered a witch to make the whole country mad. (A. True B. False)
39. In the beginning, only two people in this country did not drink the water from the well. (A. True B. False)
40. The people of Wirani once plotted to oust the king and succeeded. (A. True B. False)

四 . 翻譯 20% (請將以下對白翻譯成中文)

Miss Prism: You must put away your diary, Cecily. I really don't see why you should keep a diary at all.

Cecily: I keep a diary in order to enter the wonderful secrets of my life. If I didn't write them down, I should probably forget all about them.

Miss Prism: Memory, my dear Cecily, is the diary that we all carry about with us.

Cecily: Yes, but it usually chronicles the things that have never happened, and couldn't possibly have happened. I believe that Memory is responsible for nearly all the three-volume novels that Mudie sends us.

Miss Prism: Do not speak slightingly of the three-volume novel, Cecily. I wrote one myself in earlier days.

Cecily: Did you really, Miss Prism? How wonderfully clever you are! I hope it did not end happily? I don't like novels that end happily. They depress me so much.

Miss Prism: The good ended happily, and the bad unhappily. That is what Fiction means.

Cecily: I suppose so. But it seems very unfair.
