III. 閱讀測驗：26 至 30 題，請閱讀後選出一個最適當的答案。

We all know that Americans are loud and friendly, the French are romantic, and Japanese people are quiet and polite. But hold on a minute. These common stereotypes, which many people around the world believe, are actually untrue. Recently, a new study has shown that although national stereotypes are widespread, they are usually incorrect.

The results of this study were published in the journal Science. In the study, 4,000 people from 49 cultures received surveys instructing them to describe a typical person from their own culture. Then, participants were given another survey and told to describe themselves and people they knew from their culture.

When the two surveys were compared, the results did not match. In other words, the ways in which participants thought of a typical person from their own culture and the ways in which they thought of themselves were quite different.

Germans, for example, are often thought to be orderly and efficient. However, as the study shows, most Germans don't believe that they themselves are that way at all. They might even seem themselves as wild, passionate, or even lazy. Though they understand that a stereotype about Germans exists and might even believe that other Germans act this way, they think that they are the exceptions to it.

From the example above, we can see just how unreliable stereotypes are. So, the next time you want to use stereotypes to describe someone as a "typical" German or a "stereotypical" person from any country, think twice. Perhaps one of the researchers from the study said it best: "National stereotypes can provide some information about a culture, but they do not describe people."

26. According to the passage, what is the stereotype of the German?
(A) They are very noisy.                      (B) They are sentimental.
(C) They do things quickly.                      (D) They fall in love with people easily.
27. Which of the following statements about the research on national stereotypes is TRUE?
(A) The results of the study show that national stereotypes are usually untrue.
(B) The participants have to describe a typical person from other cultures.
(C) The results of the study have not been published yet.
(D) All 4,000 people surveyed are from Asian countries.
28. The passage inferred that how participants described themselves and how they thought of a typical person from their own culture were _____.

- (A) similar    (B) matched    (C) different    (D) incorrect
29. The word unreliable in the last paragraph means _____.
- (A) “uncertain”    (B) “unimportant”    (C) “undependable”    (D) “understandable”
30. What does the author think of national stereotypes?
- (A) We cannot believe national stereotypes because they are incorrect.
- (B) National stereotypes let us have some information about a culture.
- (C) People who don't act like their national stereotypes are just the exceptions.
- (D) We can understand people from different cultures by knowing their national stereotypes.
